Using a Forensic Toxicologist in Court to Prove Intoxication

Presenter: Jan Knudsen

Knowing how to authenticate lab results in a "per se" DUI case is a good start to proving up a DUI, but it is not the only way to use your toxicologist in the courtroom. This class will help the prosecutor understand how the toxicologist can be used as the State's expert witness, even when there is no lab result to authenticate, such as in an under the influence theory prosecution. Prosecutors interested in becoming better in using a toxicologist as an expert witness to testify regarding the impairing effects of alcohol and other drugs should attend this class.

Rocky Mountain High: Cannabis Impaired Driving

Presenter: Jan Knudsen

Colorado Traffic Safety Resource Prosecutor

The legalization of cannabis has resulted in a decrease in public perception of the product's harmfulness and, correspondingly, an increase in use. With this increased use comes a rise in cannabis impaired drivers. Cannabis impairment, however, is different from alcohol impairment and presents some unique challenges for law enforcement and prosecutors attempting to enforce DUI laws. Effective detection and prosecution of cannabis impaired drivers is critical to keeping Nevada's roadways safe, and to that end, this class will provide prosecutors with valuable information, materials and research to assist them in getting convictions in the courtroom

Prosecutorial Misconduct in Jury Trials (Ethics Credits)

Presenter: Theresa Haar

No matter how well-intentioned they may be, inelegant arguments, off-handed quips, or inadvertent remarks may cost you your case. The State's burden to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt is far reaching, and even a benign or careless comment could potentially shift that burden and amount to prosecutorial misconduct. This presentation discusses the effective use of technology and demonstrative exhibits in jury trials, and how to avoid prosecutorial misconduct through their misuse. This discussion includes specific examples of PowerPoint slides, demonstrative exhibits, and particularly closing arguments that were successfully challenged on appeal as prosecutorial misconduct.

Prescription Drug DUI Case Study (Ethics Credits)

Vineyard Room

Presenter: Mary Tanner-Richter

New York Traffic Safety Resource Prosecutor

Case Study: A mother dropped her foster child off at summer camp and then drove off the road through a church parking lot, killing three pedestrians. The woman had no idea she struck anyone. First responders noted she was disoriented, but it was attributed to a possible medical condition or being in shock. Law enforcement did not ask for consent for an evidentiary test and did not call a Drug Recognition Expert to conduct an evaluation. By the time prosecutors were notified of the incident and a DRE was called in, hours had passed, and the woman was already being treated at a local hospital. She did consent to a blood draw, and the toxicology testing showed the presence of several prescription medications. Ms. Tanner-Richter will present the details of this difficult and tragic case, how it was prosecuted and resolved, and ethical considerations for prosecutors when facing impaired driving cases involving prescription drugs, including cannabis..

Prosecutors are limited by their jurisdictional reach and subject matter jurisdiction, and as a result, prosecuting under municipal code, county ordinance, Nevada Revised Statutes, or United States Code may yield vastly different results. At times, justice may be best served by coordinating and collaborating with other agencies that have the resources or capabilities that your agency lacks. This panel will discuss opportunities for partnerships, some key differences between local, state, and federal laws, and ways to build and leverage interagency relationships.

The legal industry tops the list of professions with the highest rates of alcohol and substance abuse. Mental health professionals explain that attorneys resort to alcohol and illicit substances as a coping mechanism to deal with the high levels of stress that are inherent to lawyering. Criminal prosecutors are routinely exposed to graphic violence, disturbing imagery, or details of heinous crimes that exposes us to stresses far beyond those experienced by other attorneys. This presentation discusses these factors, offers healthier coping mechanisms, and presents other tips for better overall mental health.
